SOUTHERN REGION

Merkle Wildlife Sanctuary

Merkle Wildlife Sanctuary, the only such sanctuary operated by DNR, is the wintering ground for the largest concentration of Canada geese on the western shore of the Chesapeake Bay.

It was named after Edgar Merkle (1900-1984), an active conservationist who devoted much of his life to protecting wildlife. Starting with a handful of breeding pairs, a great deal of perseverance and a plan for habitat improvement, he eventually encouraged thousands of geese to feed and rest at the 400-acre farm. In 1970, the Merkles sold their land to the State. With the acquisition of adjoining tracts, the wildlife refuge now encompasses 1,670 acres.

A handsome building, the Frank Osloslo Visitor Center sits atop a rise overlooking several ponds and many acres of handsome fields and woods sloping down to the Patuxent River. Its two-story wall of windows and circular balconies face a spectacular view.

Inside, seasonal exhibits encompass a variety of environmental and wildlife topics, including the life history and management of the Canada goose. In addition to many kid-friendly displays, a discovery room stocked with crayons, books and dress-up clothes also features live turtles, snakes and toads.

Nature Trails

Four trails, open to hikers only, wind through the upland forests and marshes of the Patuxent River. They range from .72 to 3 miles.

Fishing

Five stocked public ponds — open from April 1 to October 1 — offer large mouth bass, blue gill and various other species. Refer to the Maryland Recreational Fishing Guide at eregulations.com/Maryland/fishing for other regulations and restrictions.

Wildlife

Upper Marlboro hosts one of the most diverse bird populations in Maryland. Bring your binoculars to glimpse a variety of hummingbirds, finches and purple martins. You're likely to see great blue herons stalking their prey and ospreys nesting close to the Visitor Center. Other frequent sightings include white-tailed deer, red fox and skunk.
