"Craig and Teena gave us a rarely seen look into the life of the American Bald Eagle. Their knowledge, passion, and true devotion to the American emblem helped us all see the raw, wild beauty of the species and the importance of protecting them. At the same time, they showed us the ways in which eagles can embody human characteristics, making the eagle a species that we can relate to—one that provides for and raises a family, fiercely protects its young, and often mates for life, as humans do. We have no doubt that anyone who sees their presentation or reads their book will gain a deep sense of empathy for the bald eagle, and a feel a certain responsibility for the future of the species. As an environmental organization, we are grateful to anyone who can impress upon people the importance of the natural world and the species we share it with, and Craig and Teena do so with an enthusiasm that is hard to resist." – Sassafras River Association
